The Altenburg Case

By GEORGE DYRE ELDRIDGE

Coypright, 1909 By George Dyre Eldridge

(Continued from Page 8.) dog was stretched comfortably before the fire, as understanding he had no part to play at present. Convinced, as Grimbleshaw was, that he was in the presence of the man who had killed John Altenburg, he could not refrain from watching Calden with the keenest interest. He did not fail to note that the man was suspicious of him as a physician, but this he ascribed, in part at least, to his unfortunate experience with physicians whose certificates and opinions had construed him to an insane asylum. "I'm not sick, I'm perfectly well," he repeated three or four times, as if in protest at Grimbleshaw's presence. After a time, however, he took a less uneasy air, and when his wife was busy in another part of the room he said to Grimbleshaw:

"There was someone lurking around the cabin last night. I'm sure." The weight of the statement was doubled by Grimbleshaw's own fears. "Did you see any one?" he asked, anxiously. "No, but Bull left the fire, where he'd been lying as he is now, and went making any noise. Then he stretched himself close to the door and nothing | ed his uncle?" I could do would induce him to leave

"How long did that last?" "Two hours at least. After that he rot up, stretched himself and came bcak to the fire and went to sleep. I'm Grimbleshaw turned it over in his mind as to how much he ought to tell of what he suspected, and of which he was now doubly assured.

"Perhaps he saved you from an attack" he ventured at last. "I don't think any one would make headway trying to get in with him here," Calden said, warmly, with a cindly glance toward the dog.

"This is scarcely a hiding place to throwing out the suggestion in the way of a feeler.

"No, but nothing better seemed to offer on the spur of the moment." 'I should think you'd be more comfortable and less exposed at home with your family."

"In that house!" he exclaimed, with a perceptible shudder. "Never!" Grimbleshaw faced a dilemma which he had not foreseen when, at the in-stance of Mrs. Calden, he had agreed to try to persuade Calden to leave the samp. He was compelled to admit that he had been influenced less by the fact that he was Calden than by the fact that he was Judith's father. But if Calden wouldn't go home, what, in face of the clear fact that he couldn't stay here, was he to do? It appeared to be a question with which he had no concern, but he had become so involved in this affair that nothing connected with it would quite surprise bim, or quite seem outside hie interest.

you came he had taken his post again at the door. Then, just before you at the door. Then, just before you constipation And the fire. Probably he heard you coming and stayed by the door until he recognized Mrs. Calden."

"Have you taken any steps to find if any of the other cabins are occupied?" The question seemed to startle Calien to a new line of thought, and at least Grimbleshaw had no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that his companion had not before thought such a thing possible. Now that it was suggested, however, it seemed to take possession of him, and he grew more and more uneasy.

"You think, then, that they have traced me here?"

"I've no doubt of it." replied Grimbleshaw, who had made up his mind now to drive to a conclusion. "Trafford can hardly have missed the fact that you must be close at hand. Miss Judith has been too closely watched for her visit here to be unknown, and you may as well face the certainty, or close approach to certainty, that not only is your being here known, but that there are enough men close at hand to make certain of your arrest if you attempt to leave here. If you do not make the attempt you will probably, remain undisturbed, but closely watched, until you are actually

"Wanted!" repeated Calden. "Wanted for what?"

He was pale and his lips trembled, tili Grimbleshaw felt a species of pity for a man who, having nerved himself to do such a deed, could afterward be so unstrung at the thought of detection and possible capture.

Then it came to him by one of those flashes of thought that in their genesis are unaccountable, that perhaps this man was not the murderer after all. set up an inflammatory condition of A man could scarcely fear for himself the intestinal system. A man could scarcely fear for himself so deeply as to be thus unstrung.

Might it not be that it was because he knew the guilty one that he was unstrung? If so, there could be but one other and that—Grimbleshaw refised to think of the name, even.

growl or other sound moved with the diseless tread of a cat to the door and tretched himself in front of it. The two men watched him with fascinated gaze that seemed unbreakable. At last Grimbleshaw, with an effort which was erceptibly great, turned his face toard his companion and said in a speak aloud. Shall I open the door and let Bull get at him?"

"No, no, no!" said Calden, hastily. yet not forgetting caution to speak under his breath. "It's bad enough as it is, but Bull would simply kill him. There's been enough killing for the present."

"But these men are bloodhounds," said Grimbleshaw, bitterly. "They're on your track, and they'll hang there with the grimness of death unless we can devise some way to throw them off. Trafford is simply merciless." "And if he can take me he'll be satisfied?"

"No," said Grimbleshaw, suddenly seeing deeper into the affair as it seemed to him than he had done hefore. "He wants you to add a link to the chain of evidence he is drawing about Horace."

"Horace!" For the moment Grimbleshaw feared for the effect of his rash words. Calden had spoken with an utter abandonment of the caution he had shown before. His face was white and waxen, and his hands shook with the intensity of his emotion, Mrs. Calden rushed to her husband's assistance, and Grimbleshaw seized his medicine case to find a restorative, blaming himself for his utterly unprofessional recklessness.

Calden, however, brushed them both aside, and though his face remained waxen and drawn, he gained command of himself almost instantly.

"Do you mean," he demanded of snuffing about the door, but without Grimbleshaw, with pitiless insistence, "that Trafford thinks that Horace kill-

"No, no, no!" Mrs. Calden moaned her face buried in her hands. "Does he?' demanded Calden, merci lessly. Brought face to face with the question, Grimbleshaw searched his mind certain he didn't so much as wink for a conscientious answer, forgetting while he lay against the door, much that he could readily shelter himself behind the impossibility of telling what was in Trafford's mind. Calden had the air of one waiting for an answer on which he had a right to insist, and which he was assured would be truth-

At last Grimbleshaw had finished his self-analysis. "I conscientiously believe," he said. "that Trafford at present thinks Horace did commit the murder. As a matter of fact. Horace might almost as well of fact, Horace might almost as well be under arrest for all the real liberty that is his. I think the only reason he has not been arrested is because Trafford thinks if he delays showing his hand he will thereby be able to secure some evidence that he might frighten away by too precipitate action."

Archbishop Farley Gives $1,000 to School

New York, Oct. 25.—Archbishop Farley, after laying the corner stone for a new parochial school in his old parish, St. Gabriel's, in East 37th street, near First avenue, yesterday afternoon, had dinner with the pastor, the Rev. William Livingston, and handed to him a check for $1,000 as his personal gift. He remarked that he would give more later. The col-his personal gift. He remarked that he would give more later. The collection amounted to about $1,500.

This ceremony marked the golden jubilee of the old school, which was in the rear of the church, in East 36th street. The archbishop closed by bestowing the apostolic benediction, as those present knelt with bared heads. The Rev. William Livingston was master of ceremonies. The serbim, or quite seem outside his interest, and least of all if it should turn out in the end that he was to decide this question and decide it suddenly.

Appendicitis

The Latter Usually Caused By the Former, Which, In Turn, Has Its Origin In Intestinal Indigestion

Chronic constipation is a which is about as prevalent as dyspep-sia and indigestion. Nearly every one suffers from it occasionally, but there are millions of people who endure it habitually, and who are accustomed to resort to the use of laxatives and catharties dally.

resort to the use of laxatives and cathartics daily.

Many people seem to have developed a perfect mania for taking pills, and instead of trying to ascertain the latent cause of the disease, and removing it by appropriate treatment, they are content to continue the reckless use of laxatives, aperients, drastic cathartics and violent purgatives, until finally inflammation of the bowels occurs, which reaches the appendix, and the result is appendicitis.

finally inflammation of the bowels occurs, which reaches the appendix, and the result is appendicitis.

In investigating and tracing the causative factors of constipation and its frequent sequel, appendicitis, it has been noted by physicians that the majority of cases were preceded and accompanied by a long-standing gastrointestinal indigestion.

The idea that appendicitis is brought on by foreign bodies, such as seeds, etc., becoming lodged in the appendix, is an exploded theory. It is now definitely known that constipation itself is previously induced by intestinal indigestion, or amylaceous dyspepsia—the inability to digest starches—so the relation between cause and effect is readily seen and appreciated.

The absurdity of attempting to cure constipation by the use of physic should be apparent to every one. Laxative drugs and powerful purgatives will never cure a disease of this sort, and those who make frequent or regular use of them will, sooner or later, set up an inflammatory condition of the intestinal system.
